

George Breilig earns AIA Colorado's 2010 Architect of the Year Award

RB+B Architects is pleased to announce that George Breilig has earned the coveted award of 2010 Architect of the Year by the American Institute of Architects, Colorado Chapter.

The Architect of the Year award recognizes achievement in the form of outstanding service to the profession of architecture in Colorado, outstanding service in the field of architectural education, outstanding achievement in the field of design or allied arts to the benefit of the profession of architecture, outstanding public service to the people of Colorado or outstanding service to the building industry of Colorado. Nominees must be licensed architects in Colorado and members of AIA Colorado for a minimum of five years, whose contributions to architecture in Colorado have been outstanding.

George has been a Principal of RB+B since 1986 and has led the design direction for many of the firm's sustainable projects. Prior to George's arrival at the firm, RB+B was virtually unknown outside of Northern Colorado School Districts. Through determination, strategic partnering and design excellence, he has grown the firm to a position of respect in the field of educational design, both statewide and nationally. Due in part to his leadership within the firm, RB+B Architects, Inc. achieved the honor of being the AIA Colorado "2004 Firm of the Year."
